formal home office. They're often set up in high traffic areas such as the kitchen or a great room, where family members interact.

In the Sakai home, Kurtis' separate work room is complemented by an alcove pocket office that Wanda uses just off the living room.

Given the shrinking size of technology – from desktop to laptop and now to tablet – a large home office no longer makes sense for many households.

Another factor: the growth of multigenerational living. Bedrooms that in the past would have been converted into home offices are increasingly being used as living quarters for extended family.

Easy as one, two, three

FED UP OF slaving over a hot wok? German Pool's smart stir-fryer Fry 123 (HK$2,280) replaces the manual effort of traditional stir-frying with simple one-touch programs.

Just throw in the ingredients, select one of three stir-fry modes and the gadget will do the rest.

Tornado stir-fry technology allows air to reach food inside the pot. The 1,256-watt stir-fryer takes an average of only two to three minutes to cook food. It also has pan-fry, grill, steam and stew functions.

As the Fry 123 has both upper and lower heating elements, ingredients can be heated simultaneously to cut down on cooking time.
